

Sting, "Russians" (from the album 'The dream of the blue turtles')

When Sting released his album 'The dream of the blue turtles' in 1985 the world had been at the edge of a 3rd world war. The USA and Russia were watching each other with envious eyes and each of the two nations assured the other that nuclear weapons would be used in case of an attack.

The American President, Mr Ronald Reagan, called Russia the 'Empire of evil' whilst the leader of the Russian communist party made no secret of thinking very much the same of the Americans.

In _____ and (from) _____, there's _____ _____ of hysteria

Conditioned to respond to all the threats

in _____.

Mr Krushchev _____.

I _____ subscribe _____.

_____ ignorant _____

If _____.

How _____ -

_____?

_____ monopoly of common sense

On _____.

_____ share _____

Regardless of ideology.

_____:

I _____.

There is no historical precedent _____

_____.

There's _____.

It's _____.

Mr _____.

_____ subscribe _____.

_____:

_____.

....

What _____, is _____,